Travelling is one of the most fascinating things in our life.

We get lots of knowledge and experience about different countries and their culture, by it. But nowadays people are more tending to fly straight to the holiday resorts, and are less interested in walking on the beautiful streets of different countries, looking at some spectacular sightseeings and just getting some new information about the local culture of a country.

sp. But ~~for~~ for example about 50 years ago, the situation was completely different. But why did it happen?

In my opinion, this "lazy" tourism is caused by the development of modern technologies and the invention of the Internet. Now we can get any information about foreign country, by making ~~some~~ <sup>three</sup> clicks, that's why people find it useless to cross the border of their hotel to get the information about the culture they're visiting.

People in the past were living without all these facilities, they could get some information only from the books, that's why when they were visiting the foreign countries, they tried to get as much information as they could, they were visiting museums, galleries and some sightseeings of a country, they were ~~also~~ visiting, to feel its culture.

So, as for me, I'm not a fan of the holiday resorts, ~~the resorts~~ where you just ~~eat~~ eat and lay on the beach. I prefer the tourism, where you walk on the streets of the country, talk with foreigners and ~~get~~ <sup>feel</sup> the foreign culture.

So, I think that active tourism is much more ~~is~~ exciting and fascinating than the holiday resorts.
